

MILK FREE / CASEIN FREE

If you have a milk allergy—an abnormal immune response to proteins found in cow’s milk—you are not alone. In fact, milk is one of the eight most common food allergens. In order to prevent reactions, those with milk allergies must avoid all milk products, a challenging task considering ingredients derived from milk proteins are found in many foods. Fortunately, there’s help from the FDA—and Publix. The FDA requires common food allergens to be stated on packaging, which means you can know if a food has milk or milk proteins simply by reading the label. And for even more help while you shop, we’ve compiled a list of Publix brand products that are free of milk, milk proteins, or any ingredient derived from milk or milk proteins.

Note: A milk allergy shouldn’t be confused with lactose intolerance. Lactose intolerance is trouble digesting lactose (the sugar in milk); however, the problem does not involve an abnormal immune response and is therefore not an allergy.
